

Commissioning Art

I love to work with collectors on commissioned pieces of art. Commissioning art is a simple way to find a painting that fits your exact desires. It's a really easy process, too!

Step 1: Preliminary Decisions

The collector (that's YOU!) decides what type of painting they would like. Most of the time, people are interested in paintings that represent special interests. I have painted flowers from a wedding, flowers from a funeral, favorite flowers of people close to the collector, flowers from a family garden and a flower/plant that represents a certain place.

Step 2: Request for Art

The collector contacts me with a request for art. This is not a formal process. Simply email me at jgillen1@outlook.com or send me a text, Instagram DM or phone call. Let me know what you'd like painted. I take on most commissions and work diligently to make the process easy for you.

Step 3: Shared Commitments

I'll ask you to commit to a size and specifics about the painting such as horizontal vs. vertical orientation, which reference photo to use, whether or not it will be framed by me. At this point, we will also lock in the price so you know exactly what to expect.

Step 4: Art Creation

Time to paint! I will start working on your art as soon as possible. Sometimes there is a waiting list (prior to holidays). I'll let you know a time frame for completion. Throughout the process, I'll keep you updated with process photos. If you are having me frame the art, I will send you frame options and prices during this time.

Step 5: Art Delivery

When the art is finished, I will pack it carefully for delivery. We will work together to determine the most cost effective delivery options while also keeping the artwork safe. Once you receive the art and approve it in person, we will set up a payment method that works best for both of us. You will have 30 days to return the art (in its original condition) if you decide it doesn't work well for you.
